

Assessment of a potential risk of incorrect decisions when using satellite derived meteorological data

Mariam Modrekelidze

E-mail: mariam.modrekelidze643@ens.tsu.edu.ge

Department of Geography, Faculty of Exact and Natural Sciences

Ivane Javakhishvili Tbilisi State University

3, I. Chavchavadze Avenue, Tbilisi, 0179, Georgia

In modern meteorological services and scientific research, information received from satellites is becoming increasingly important. This information plays an important role in monitoring air temperature, precipitation, drought, food security, and weather-related issues on Earth. The study of current processes using artificial satellites provides an opportunity to obtain unique information in a short time.

This study is concerned with assessing the potential risk of incorrect decisions when using meteorological data received from satellites, using the example of Georgia.